Stainless Steel 347 slotted pipes are highly reputed and find immense numbers of applications across different industries because of high strength and durability and resistance to corrosion. These pipes are fabricated with precision, conformed to international quality standards, and hence they are highly in demand for applications requiring superior mechanical properties along with appeal.

Stainless Steel 347 is the low-carbon version of the conventional 304-grade metal, it is excellent in weldability, with minimal risk of carbide precipitation during its welding process. This will make it ideal in applications involving heavy welding, since the compromise which would have been made to corrosion resistance would be small. Slotted designs add functionality, particularly in architectural or in-building use, filtration, or whenever controlled flow or design aesthetics could be important.
